Baskets made of needles

BY RACHEL HERGETT
FOR THE CHRONICLE

Behind the desk at the Artists' Gallery in the Emerson Center in Bozeman, LeeAnn Galusha grasps the lip of a work in progress — a basket-like piece with bits of negative space formed around a green rock slice with rows of synthetic sinew stitches curving gracefully up its sides and an inverted triangle of glass beads reaching down. Her hands work quickly, stitching around a rope made of caramel-colored pine needles, then reaching for more and repeating the process.

Galusha has tried many art forms. During the pandemic lockdowns, she turned to glass, which she said makes her happy, and created mosaics of glass on rocks.

"I pick up a lot of things and do them, like needlework when I was younger," Galusha said. "Anything that came along I wanted to do it."

Basket-weaving with pine needles, however, is her true passion.

Rachel Hergett for the Chronicle

"I was always interested in it," Galusha said, recalling an article about the art in AARP Magazine she read at 12. Galusha wouldn't get her hands on a basket until 1989, when she took a class in Bend, Oregon. She often tells people the work "felt right." Her hands seemed to possess an innate understanding of the process.

"When I found the pine needle baskets, that was it," Galusha said. "That was what I was going to do."

OF 'NBC NEWS DAILY' ON NBC

How would you describe "NBC News Daily" as it begins its weekday run?

I would say it's the same thing that we've been doing well forever at NBC News, which is ... the news. It's really driven by good journalism. An hour is a lot of time in network news, and it allows you to be able to dig in a little more.

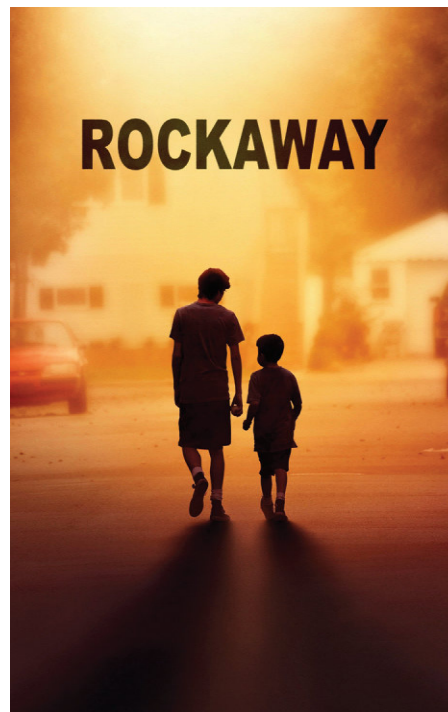

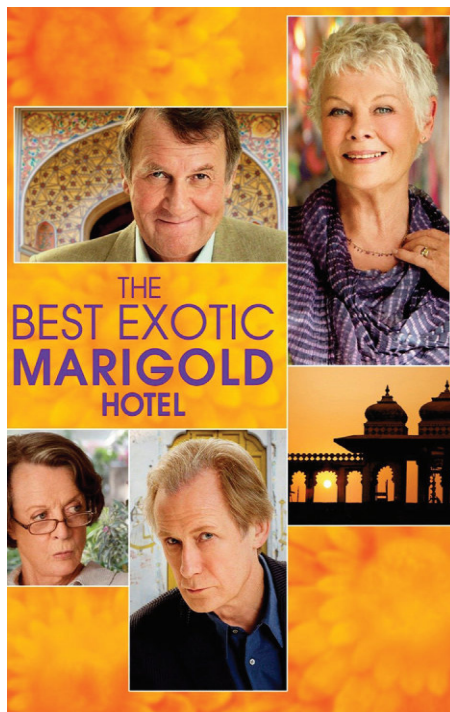

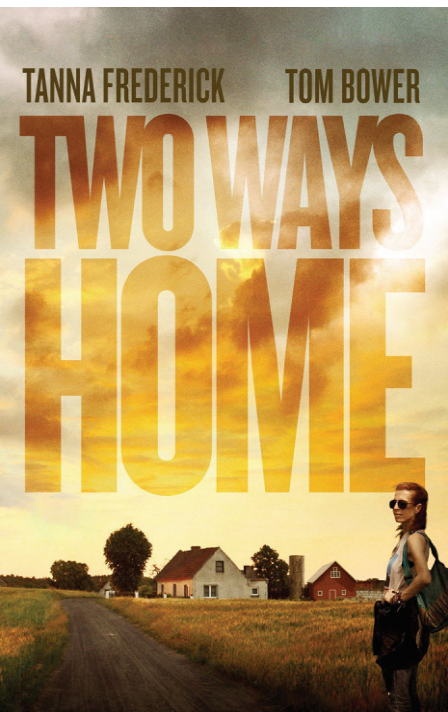

I love the idea that as a correspondent, I can have a conversation and really get into something and talk with the anchors about what I'm reporting on. Now, I'm going to be the co-anchor who will be doing that, and we'll have the best correspondents of NBC News on the broadcast. And we'll be able to go a little bit deeper.

"NBC News Daily" is replacing the long-running serial "Days of Our Lives," which is moving to the Peacock streaming service. What would you say to fans of that show?

I understand that people are extremely loyal to "Days of Our Lives," and now, they're going to be able to watch it every day on their own schedule. It's not going away, it's just going to require a little adjustment. At the same time, if they tune in and see our show and they like the news, maybe they'll watch. And I hope we'll reach new viewers who are looking for news content.

“Movie: The Best Exotic Marigold Hotel”

Once there, they find the place isn’t in quite the lavish condition promised. Maggie Smith, Bill Nighy and Tom Wilkinson also star.

“Movie: Rockaway”
First-time filmmaker John Budion wrote and directed this 2017 coming-of-age drama that’s inspired by a true story as a New York man recalls the summer of 1994, when he and his brother plotted revenge against their abusive father. Keidrich Sellati, Maxwell Apple, James Di Giacomo and Tanner Flood head the cast.

“NFL Football”
The 17-game slate kicks off with a powerhouse AFC West match-up as Patrick Mahomes and the Kansas City Chiefs play host to Justin Herbert and the Los Angeles Chargers. # When TV foodie series get weird

Anyone who has ever undercooked a turkey or overbaked bread knows that weird stuff can come out of the kitchen.

Same holds true for cooking shows. As culinary TV adds more and more to its number these days, programmers are going to greater and greater lengths to make foodie shows that stand out from the rest. To them, weirder is better and viewers seem to be eating it up (pardon the pun). Such as these productions, past and present.

“Hotties” (Hulu, 2022-present): Forcing down really hot food and collaborating on cooking challenges helps to break the ice for attractive singles on their first date in this foodie/dating show hosted by comedian Jade Catta-Preta from a food truck in the middle of the California desert. Hot, hot, hot.

“Is It Cake?” (Netflix, 2022-present): “Saturday Night Live” player Mikey Day hosts as skilled bakers create realistic replicas of everyday items such as a handbag, a radio and a bowling pin in the hopes of fooling a panel of celebrity judges into thinking they’re real. Those that are successful win a $5,000 prize

“Hot Ones” (YouTube, 2015-present): Similar to “Hotties,” excessively hot chicken wings are the catalyst for conversation between host Sean Evans and celebrity guests in this foodie/talk series. Nothing like a wing that scores high on the Scoville heat scale to bring the real out of the likes of Ricky Gervais, Henry Rollins, Al Roker, Jeff Goldblum and Neil DeGrasse Tyson, among others.

“The Curious Creations of Christine McConnell” (Netflix, 2018): Part cooking show, part “Addams Family”-like sitcom, this goth-inspired series follows artist and baker McConnell in her haunted mansion as she creates morbid-looking desserts such as gingerbread haunted houses, caramel spiders and wolf claw donuts. Certainly imaginative but unfortunately it lasted only six episodes.

“Crime Scene Kitchen” (Fox, 2021-present): In this competition series hosted by Joel McHale, contestants must enter a kitchen and examine clues left behind – crumbs, flour, etc. – to determine the dessert that was just consumed, then must recreate the confection. Those that guess right and recreate the dish that best impresses the judges wins a $100,000 grand prize. Not bad work if you can get it.

“The Colgate Culinary Hour” (NBC, 1950-55): One of the rotating elements of “The Colgate Comedy Hour,” this spinoff series features Dean Martin and Jerry Lewis cooking. That’s right, suave Dino and silly Jerry. In the kitchen. Cooking. Yes, this is going back a ways to the Golden Age of Television but we couldn’t resist.

'M*A*S*H' goes Farr for anniversary memories

One of television's most classic sitcoms is marking its 50th anniversary this month, and the event gets a special spin as MeTV marks the occasion by celebrating "M*A*S*H" with a week of co-star Jamie Farr's favorite episodes from Monday, Sept. 12, through Friday, Sept. 16. Two shows will be presented back-to-back each night.

Though Farr's character – Corporal Maxwell Klinger, who was perpetually in pursuit of a discharge from duty in the Korean War – is very present in the selected stories, he's not necessarily the principal player in them, underscoring the true ensemble piece that "M*A*S*H" was. A good example is the first night's "The Trial of Henry Blake," which finds that lieutenant colonel character (played by McLean Stevenson) brought up on charges by Maj. Margaret "Hot Lips" Houlihan and Maj. Frank Burns (Loretta Swit, Larry Linville).

more retro rewinds

"The Blair Witch Project" (Hulu, streaming): Much-imitated, even now, this 1999 chiller became a huge independent hit by showing the "found footage" of a trio of young amateur filmmakers (played by Heather Donahue, Joshua Leonard and Michael C. Williams) after they ventured into a forest and evidently discovered too much about a dangerous legend.

"Hotel" (Turner Classic Movies, Monday, Sept. 12): Before Arthur Hailey's novel "Airport" was turned into one of the most profitable movies ever made, another of his books serviced this glossy 1967 drama set at a venerable New Orleans hotel being targeted for a takeover. Rod Taylor plays the manager and Melvyn Douglas the owner in a cast that also includes Karl Malden, Merle Oberon, Michael Rennie, Catherine Spaak, Kevin McCarthy and Richard Conte. A later TV-series version changed the setting to San Francisco.

Needles/from 2

Galusha grew up in Illinois, learning to love the natural world from her outdoorsman father. After high school, she worked and lived in Yellowstone for almost two decades. Galusha met her husband in Yellowstone, and the pair went north to the University of Montana to earn teaching degrees, then farther north to Alaska where they taught at a small school on Evan's Island in Prince William Sound.

Now retired, Galusha and her husband moved back to Bozeman in 2014, where she can focus on creating.

"It's nice to have the freedom and time to do this," Galusha said.

In her home studio, a shelf of dyed needles is within arms reach as she works. Galusha has a travel case, with small bundles of needles and room for decorative pieces and other supplies. If that's too much, her husband said she tucks supplies in a gallon plastic bag that can fit in her purse.

Galusha uses two types of pine needles in her work, both nearly a foot long and selected because they retain flexibility. Needles from the long-leaf pine, a species native to the southeast, turn a deep caramel as they dry. Galusha also collects needles from the Apache pine in southern Arizona. As they dry, the Apache pine needles fade into a greenish-tan, allowing Galusha to dye them in a rainbow of colors for her work. Locally, Ponderosa pine needles work for weaving, but they must be soaked to make them more pliable.

"Soaking is an art in itself," Galusha said, explaining there is a fine line between pliable enough to work with and wet enough to mold.

While not necessary for weaving, Galusha begins each work with what she calls a "center."

"It can be anything I want," she said, pulling walnut shells sliced by her father-in-law and pottery pieces made by her sister from a travel case. The center informs the work, with Galusha taking inspiration for color and form from the heart of the piece.

She binds the needles with artificial sinew or waxed Irish linen thread that slides easily along the between them. While moving a sewing needle back and forth to secure the needle coils may not be entertaining to onlookers, and the evenly spaced stitches and intricate patterns maintain incredible consistency, the art is more varied than it seems.

"Every stitch isn't really the same," she said. "I think about every stitch. You want to make sure the needle is laid a certain way, make sure it's still curving up, not going flat."

Most of the pieces on display in the Artists' Gallery are small, under 8 inches in diameter. Galusha said she once made a large basket and later pulled it out of her studio closet, but it was mainly to prove that such a thing was possible. After a certain point, she said the size made its creation feel repetitive.

Galusha said her work now is more art than function.

"I'm always thinking about new ways, new things, new designs," she said. "I don't want to get stagnant with it."

One piece, with swirling sections emanating from two beads at the center recalls a contra dance.

"I think it's truly different and truly beautiful," said Anne Danahy, an artist who stopped by the gallery to drop off a painting. "It's unique... People are fascinated by it."

Galusha estimates that she has created thousands over the years, each cataloged in a series of binders. While some remain in her collection, Galusha said letting them go has gotten easier over the years, especially when she thinks about where they may have found a home.

"To be able to bring art and maybe some happiness and joy to people, I think it's great," Galusha said. "To think that my art is in somebody's home and they look at it and they might smile or something, that makes me feel really good. That sounds so corny and sappy, but it's true."

Galusha shows her work at the Artists' Gallery, where she will be a featured artist during the Sept. 9 Art Walk, and at 10 Gallery in Livingston. She has a Facebook page, <https://www.facebook.com/pineneedlebasketsbyLAG/>, but closed her Etsy shop because she wants people to interact with the pieces.

"Most people haven't encountered (pine-needle weaving) before," Galusha said. "Smell it. Touch it. Realize that it's solid, that it's not flimsy at all. It's going to stick around for a long time. The quality of work in it makes a difference."

Broncos hope Wilson brings winning pedigree to Denver

The Denver Broncos haven't had a winning season since 2016 nor a postseason appearance since 2015. They hope to change all that with the acquisition of Russell Wilson.

Indeed, in the 33-year-old Cincinnati native, whom they acquired from the Seattle Seahawks for three players and a boatload of draft picks in March, the Broncos are getting a signal caller with a Super Bowl title, nine Pro Bowl appearances and a laundry list of other passing laurels to his name. And not that long ago, he was among the elite quarterbacks in the game, posting numbers among the leaders year after year.

Last season, however, was not one of them. Sidelined for three games for a finger injury to his throwing hand that required surgery, Wilson's stats were off slightly but not precipitously. He completed 259 of 400 passes for 3,133 yards and 25 touchdowns against six interceptions for a 54.7 QBR and a 103.1 rating. He also rushed for another 183 yards. All respectable numbers but nowhere near the standard he's set for himself.

Along with his Super Bowl and Pro Bowl appearances are his 105 wins since 2012, the most among active quarterbacks. He's also the only quarterback in NFL history to throw for more than 35,000 yards and run for another 4,500-plus, and his 101.8 career rating ranks fourth all-time.

He'll be in charge of new head coach Nathaniel Hackett's wide-open offense when he returns to Lumen Field to lead the Broncos against his old team, the Seahawks, in a season-opening game airing Monday, Sept. 12, on ABC.
